

REDEMPTION: Grace Extended and the Real Price of Success

Bartholomew (Bart) Butler is a survivor and a thriver. He survived growing up in a tough Washington, DC neighborhood in the 70s and 80s where drugs, crime and death were the norm. None of his brothers lived past the age of 30. His biggest fear is that his fate would be the same.

Instead, he received his college degree and excelled in the real estate and mortgage business, until he was incarcerated.

However, he became a model inmate, helping jail staff with personal business matters and running his mortgage company from his cell. He gained an early release and ultimately made millions in the process, owning three homes, five cars, a boat and limo, and enjoyed all the trappings of a successful life. Then the recession hit and he lost it all.

He had to re-think everything and he redefined what success really means. He focused on his faith, his family and legacy, and developed success strategies that work. Now he has five businesses and is thriving. His new book "Redemption: Grace Extended and the Real Price of Success," tells his personal story and how he turned his life upside down, and then turned it around.

He has many life and business lessons to share and can discuss the following:

Life Lessons:

- Overcoming negative circumstances
- Importance of mindset and mentality
- The impact of faith and family
- How to redefine success
- The importance of legacy

Business Lessons:

- How to redefine yourself as an entrepreneur after incarceration or any life challenge
- How to balance multiple businesses
- The team you need to win in business
- The CES System – Contemplate, Evaluate and Strategize
- More systems to help you run your business(es)
- Learning how to say no and why it is important in business
- The importance of giving back
